

Rory Clark (music and multi-media)

Since graduating with a BA Hons in Applied music from the University of Strathclyde in 2006, Rory has worked and collaborated with students of all ages and abilities to create music and make NOISE. With a focus on creating new and unique music, he aims to challenge participants to take risks, make decisions, explore, question and communicate in a new and meaningful way. With his work in education and his own practice as a musician, Rory is interested in how the arts can shape and strengthen our understanding of community and the world around us.

Within the last few years, Rory has worked with nursery to college students and led CPD sessions in creative and participatory music making with primary and secondary teachers, music specialists and instrumental tutors.
